GENERAL TIRE

If 1,000 tires are produced in the same manufacturing plant and the tires are the same model, size and load range then all 1,000 tires will have exactly the same identical DOT number molded on the sidewall if they were produced during the same week.

Conducting Tire Tread Analysis and Comparison

Photography

- General Scene - to document impressions and scene - not for examination

- Examination Quality Photograph - for examination

Casting

- Use of Dental Stone to fill three dimensional impressions in soil, sand, snow

Known Shoe and Tire Impressions

- Known impressions are used to demonstrate repeatability of design, size, wear and individual characteristics and to provide a comparative aid in the examination

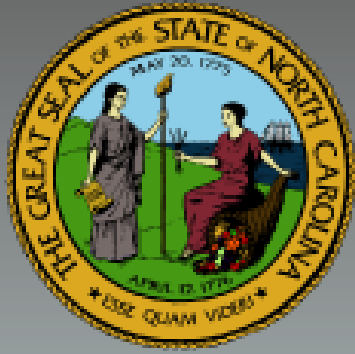

- Tire designs are made up of a series of tread blocks.
- These tread blocks vary in size and arrangement around the circumference of a tire to help reduce noise.
- Their combined size and arrangement usually never repeats and is different on each side of the tire.

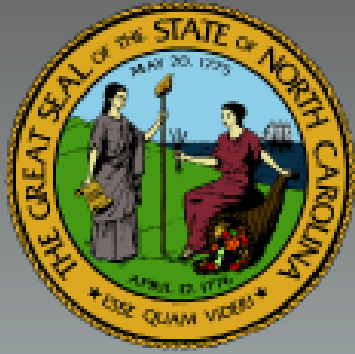

- Each inked impression is passed over the cast to locate areas where the tread block sizes and arrangement correspond.
- When found, the segment of the tire represented by the inked impression is compared directly with that segment of the tire.
